The School of Business unanimously approved the following motion on Thursday, April 17:

The School of Business considers academic freedom to be an essential foundation of a college education. A learning environment at the College of Charleston that champions and preserves intellectual integrity and encourages the pursuit of knowledge in all disciplines must be continually nurtured. For the common good of society, the College must protect the freedom for all faculty and students to engage in academic study, research and debate without fear of censorship, retaliation, restrictions, public pressure or the imposed interference of religious or political beliefs.
